L.A. de royal in

BY LINDZI SCHARF

Adina Reyter knows what her profession. "Living in L.A. a lot of people look at you and said during lunch at the Hotel one and their mother is a jeweler. However, only a few can say client.

Markle, now known as the earrings by Reyter in March Commonwealth Day service in London she has the world's most unique she's wearing our $400 earrings again," Reyter said, referencing Diamond Amigos curve posts from Shopbop. Markle has shown multiple occasions: a teardrop necklace and a pair of pavé curve wing earrings.

Although they've never met the women appear to share a mutual admiration. "Meg Markle's style is impeccable," said Reyter, 43. "She encapsulates who our customers are."

Reyter said Markle's appeal is simple. "She's beautiful, dressed, but she has an accessibility that a lot of the other models do not have," she said. "I remember seeing her with ripped jeans and a white button-down shirt and her heels on and I thought to myself, 'I would wear that outfit anywhere.' She has a relatability factor but yet she looks so chic and she looks like royal."

Markle has since become a muse of sorts for Reyter. The designer recently expanded her Teardrop collection to include various re-imaginings of the piece's signature pavé diamond shape in the form of earrings, necklaces and bracelets. The teardrop retails for $298 to $1,598 and is inspired by the duchess' teardrop pendant.

"She's revived a style that we have always loved," Reyter said. 2014. Markle is said to have been spotted wearing the teardrop pendant.
